Got a little creative today building my own world and moving some blocks around. So instead of creating five different blocks, I only made two and then kept moving them around. So I made my own function to do that. And there was some interesting cool things that happened from that. So this is the function running and I've got my two blocks made. And then I move on over and there's a little bit of a gap. It's kind of cool. And so things just move in. It was interesting. There's a gap right there.
